Involvement One of Key Factors in Student Retention

BY BRIAN J. TODD

This story is part three in a series of six examining UNO's retention and recruitment problems. Next issue: UNO's social scene.

As a part of the University of Nebraska, UNO has long suffered as the Rodney Dangerfield of higher education in the state.

In the 1970s and 1980s the university was often known by less-than-flattering nicknames that alluded to UNO's status as a commuter campus and often led to a lack of respect for the university in the eyes of the community and some students.

In a Gateway story Tuesday, students noted the lack of a typical college atmosphere at UNO as a reason for the low retention rate at the university.

"National statistics show that students involved on campus have a higher retention rate," said Guy Conway, director of the Milo Bail Student Center.

Conway said he hopes the newly-remodeled Student Center will help serve as a focus for campus involvement and solve some of the university's problems with retention.

Before the renovations began, student organizations were spread across campus in several buildings, making it harder for students to find an organization, Conway said. He noted the Gateway's former offices in annex 26 as an example of a student organization's location that was not beneficial to involvement.

He said the newspaper's new location in the Student Center has helped increase participation on the student newspaper.

"Now students are hanging out more in the building," he said. "I think you see more

Candidates Confront Issues in Final Debate

BY PAT JUSTICE

Sparks flew Wednesday in the Milo Bail Student Center as UNO Student President/Regent candidates met for their final debate.

Fifteen people witnessed this last confrontation between William Wade (Wally) Waller and Jason Winterboer, who verbally slugged it out in battle for the office which will be decided in the runoff election on Nov. 12 and 13.

In the final minutes of the debate, Waller answered the question: "How he would present himself to the student body and the community?" by attacking his opponent as "ineffective" and calling his contributions to the UNO community "a waste."

Winterboer responded by saying that he "didn't feel that he (Waller) had the qualities and the experience to be a good leader" for the student body.

Earlier in the debate, Waller admitted that other than his previous involvement with the football team, he had not been involved in any campus organizations.

This contrasted sharply with the leadership Winterboer said distinguishes him from Waller. Winterboer, a former Student Programming Organization director, estimates he has given 1,500 hours of volunteer service on this campus.

Winterboer said, "The Student President has to have delved into organizations here on campus. You have to get your hands dirty. You have to have been here to be in these positions. I don't think you effectively know how the university works or how organizations work. You have to work with a number of different students in the framework of the university."

Winning in the LONG RUN!

The Jackrabbits are going to need all of their feet to trip up a Mav squad gunning for an NCC title. South Dakota State comes to town Saturday at 1:00 p.m. See page 9.

The Womens' Volleyball team looks to continue their winning ways as well, squaring off against the Bears of Northern Colorado tonight and the Bulldogs of Minnesota-Duluth Saturday. See page 9.

The cream of the cross-country crop will be here for the Division II Nationals this weekend and the Mavericks are looking to make a statement here on their turf.

Results conflict theories Election Predictions on the Web

BY JONATHAN PELPHREY

The 1996 election in Omaha did not turn out exactly as UNO geography graduate student Chris Poulsen and Michael Peterson, UNO professor of geography, envisioned it would.

Not that Poulsen and Peterson were necessarily pulling for one candidate over another. They were actually rooting for their World Wide Web page.

Poulsen and Peterson created a World Wide Web page that, along with showing the results, by precinct, of the 1994 elections in Omaha, made predictions for the 1996 elections.

The web page contains color maps of Omaha divided into election precincts. In addition to documenting the results of the 1994 election, the maps illustrate statistics for each precinct, including party affiliation of voters, voter turnout, and traditional party strongholds.

For the 1996 elections Peterson and Poulsen decided to make predictions based on the election results in 1994. By studying the voting patterns in each precinct in 1994, they attempted to guess how each precinct would vote this year in both the race for senator and representative.

Gov. Ben Nelson, the Democratic candidate for U. S. Senate, did not do as well as expected east of 72nd, which has traditionally been a stronghold for the Democratic Party. "Nelson has always been pretty popular," Poulsen said, looking at the results from key precincts east of 72nd Street. "I just don't know what happened."

Peterson and Poulsen, according to their prediction map, were expecting Nelson to hold much of the eastern half of Omaha, while making some inroads into the largely Republican west, especially on the northern and southern edges of the city.

The opposite was the case. Nelson's opponent, Chuck Hagel, was able to win a number of precincts east of 72nd Street, particularly between Blondo and Grover streets.

Peterson and Poulsen based their prediction for the Nelson/Hagel race on the results from the 1994 Senate race, which pitted Sen. Bob Kerrey against Jan Stoney. In that election, Kerrey won all but two precincts east of 72nd Street, and was able to win about half of the precincts west of 72nd.

"We likened him (Nelson) to Kerrey," said Peterson. "We knew he wouldn't do quite as well as Kerrey, but we thought he'd be comparable."

Poulsen said he thought Nelson would have a good chance of winning those precincts which supported Kerrey with 57 percent of the vote or more.

While a little disappointed that their predictions were not completely accurate, Poulsen and Peterson are still interested in the things their maps can tell them.

"Most cities have a donut-shaped ring," said Peterson, referring to the way a partisan breakdown of most cities looks on a map, "but Omaha is a river town so that's why you have things like 72nd street." Peterson said that because Omaha runs from

California Voters Approve Prop 209

BY COLLEGE PRESS SERVICE

SACRAMENTO—A bitter campaign over affirmative action ended Nov. 5 with the passage of Proposition 209, a California measure that bans preferences for women and minorities in all state hiring and university admissions.

The controversial ballot measure won 55 percent to 44 percent, making California the first state in the nation to ban affirmative action programs.

Nevertheless, a day after Proposition 209's passage, there were signs that heated exchanges over the divisive issue were far from over.

At the University of California-Berkeley, about 300 students marched in protest, carrying a sign that said "Fuck the System, Revolt Against 209."

"Some people actually think that [its passage] will provoke even more discussion," said Ryan Tate, news editor for Berkeley's The Daily Californian, which endorsed Proposition 209.

Hundreds of angry students led protests, many ending with arrests, when the UC board of regents voted in 1995 to drop affirmative-action policies throughout UC's nine-campus system.

Supporters of the ban gathered enough signatures to place the measure on the November ballot, allowing voters to decide the issue.

UC President Richard C. Atkinson said the campaign had prompted "extraordinarily divisive and passionate" debate but that now it is time to move on.

"Now we must also look to the broader issue of how, in light of Proposition 209, we can best fulfill our responsibilities as a public university in the nation's most ethnically and culturally diverse state," he wrote in a letter to UC regents Nov. 6.

"The question facing education is clear: How do we establish new paths to diversity consistent with the law?" he said.

Atkinson said the university system would continue to support outreach programs for disadvantaged and low-income students. Ensuring that they have access to education is one idea that has "tended to unite people on all sides" of the affirmative action issue, he said. The university system would also continue to seek a diverse pool of applicants for jobs and contracts, he said.

activities. SPO (Student Programming Organization) is doing a lot more in the Student Center. I think more people are getting involved."

Tara Knudson, director of Student Organizations and Leadership Development (SOLD), said that SOLD is trying to do more with the events that it has sponsored in the past and the remodeled Student Center has had a positive impact.

"I've heard so much positive feedback that it's incredible," she said.

Having a central office with cubicle space for student organizations has been positive for getting students interested and active in those organizations she said.

Knudson said she does not have any hard numbers to confirm that more students are becoming involved in campus organizations, but the number of people coming to the SOLD office this year has increased.

Student organizations are working with one another more, Knudson said, because they share common office space. For example, a recent Halloween party was put on by SPO and four agencies of Student Government.

"The building is facilitating that," she said.

Knudson said that although UNO does not have fraternity or sorority houses on campus, members of greek organizations receive the same opportunities at UNO that they would at campuses with greek houses.

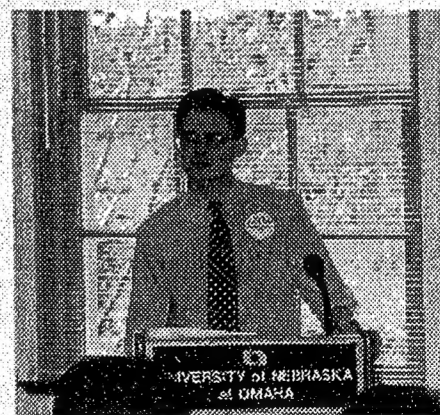

The greek organizations at UNO have worked hard to offer the social and leadership opportunities that their members would find at a more traditional campus. A few fraternities even have residential houses, she said.

Conway said, "I'd like to think that just the impact of the physical facilities will have a positive effect."

The more eye-appealing look that the renovation gave the Student Center should also help to get students more involved on campus, he said. The more attractive the Student Center is, the more likely students will want to stay on campus and participate in activities.

WALLER

Waller repeatedly presented himself as an outsider to Student Government. He listed three states where he attended college before UNO - New Mexico, Idaho, and California. He did not say if he was involved in any groups on those campuses.

An understanding of how things were done and what has worked for other campuses were among the benefits Waller said that he gained from his earlier experience.

He said he would work towards improved communication on campus, through reinstituting the radio station KBLZ, which was never a broadcast station and was only heard in the Milo Bail Student Center (MBSC), and advertising on the shuttle buses.

"Nobody knows the things that are going on on campus. We don't have a reliable source of communication," Waller said.

Referring to the newly formed Inter-Organizational Council, Waller said, "That's an agency of student government. The IOC, everybody's not represented there."

He then proposed another organization called "GAFA" be formed which would stand for "grieks, athletics, agencies, and fine arts."

He said this would pull students, rather than organizations, together.

Responding to a question regarding the qualities needed as Student President/Regent, a non-voting member of the University of Nebraska Board of Regents, Waller said, "the regent position has to do with going to meetings, and sitting there with the regents and giving a yea, nay, abstain, voicing your opinions."

Winterboer said he attended the July regents meeting and has seen the board at work.

Winterboer gave specific examples of his past efforts to develop that sense of community which Waller asserted was lacking. He gave an example of projects completed by SPO under his leadership which served students and were designed to foster a community atmosphere.

One such example was a SPO hospitality buffet for students five days before finals on Dec. 6 last year, he said.

The debate was sponsored by UNO Student Government and the Council for Community and Legislative Relations (CCLR). UNO Student President/Regent Craig Richter and CCLR Director, Tugba Kalafatoglu were the panelists for the traditional-style debate which included both candidates responding to identical questions followed by rebuttals by each.

Flying Mavs Soar in Competition

By SAVONDA N. JOHNSON

Twice a week, a group of dedicated UNO students pull themselves out of a groggy stupor to fly.

Beginning at 5:30 a.m., the 15 members of UNO's Intercollegiate Flight Team "The Flying Mavs" work to perfect their skills in aviation events in the air and on the ground. The skills they develop will be used in competitions against other aviation programs around the country.

The Flying Mavs took part in one such competition, the National Intercollegiate Flying Association (NIFA) Region VI Safecon Flight Competition, October 15-19, in Salina, Kansas. Region VI consists of Oklahoma, Kansas, Missouri and Nebraska. The team placed second in the team ground events and fifth for overall team standing.

Seth Dokter placed fourth in the top pilot competition. Dokter also won individual medals in computer accuracy, aircraft pre-flight, simulated cross country flight, and cross country navigation. Terje Stoneman placed in cross country navigation, flight simulator, simulated comprehensive aviation navigation, and short field landing. Tak Yamamoto medaled in computer accuracy and aircraft pre-flight. Adrian Hernandez placed in computer accuracy. Scott Vasek received a medal in power off landing. Steve Ryberg placed in aircraft recognition.

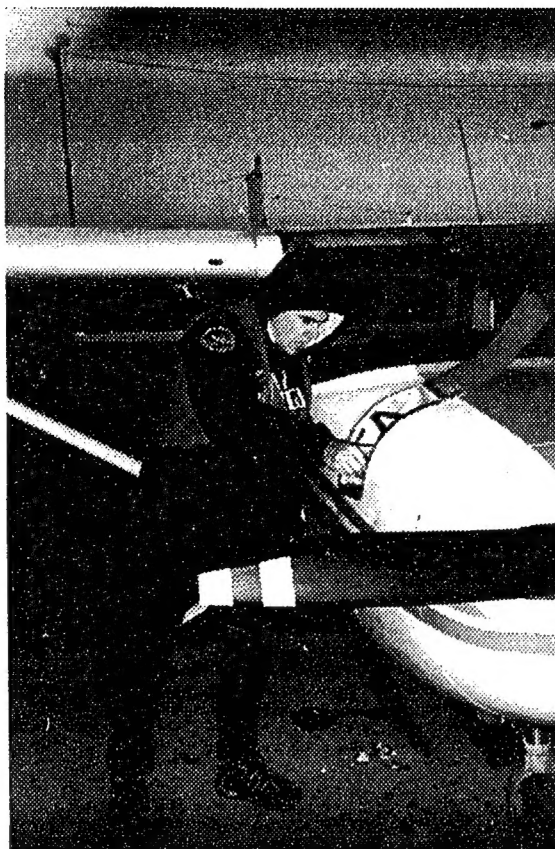

"The team came in 5th overall out of nine schools competing," said co-captain Scott Vasek, "We weren't far from the top three, so we were close to making nationals."

The top three teams from each region qualify for the national competition, held in the Spring. Last year, the UNO Flying Mavs qualified for the NIFA National Championship Competition, where they won several team and individual awards.

"One of the premier events (in NIFA competitions) is the navigation event," said Vasek. Stoneman placed in this event for UNO. In the navigation event, teams consisting of two people are given latitude and longitude points. They must plot them out."

Stoneman was partnered with Hernandez.

"I planned the flight and Adrian (Hernandez) tells me where I am and where I need to be," said Stoneman. "He keeps

UNO's Flying Mavs are also a diverse group, counting several international students among their ranks. "We have two members from Japan, and one from Singapore. There are two females on the team, too," said faculty advisor and professor of Aviation Denny Acheson.

"The team has grown considerably," team coach Jon Hiles said. "We've gone from four members to fifteen members."

The reasons for flying on the team are just as diverse. Stoneman said he has always been around planes (his father is in the Air Force). "I'm not athletically talented," he said, "so I like flying."

Maps provided and created by Marvin J. Barton, Chris Poulsen and Michael Peterson.

These two maps show the difference two years make. Kerrey was able to win a number of precincts west of 72nd Street, while Nelson won only one and lost a number of precincts east of 72nd.

east to west, the more affluent (and traditionally Republican) areas of Omaha are all located on one side of the city, rather than forming a ring around the traditionally Democratic central city.

On the first page of the World Wide Web site, a map depicting the party affiliation of registered voters in Omaha shows a division that runs North/South along 72nd Street, Republican dominating the western side, democrats the East.

In large part, 72nd Street became the political dividing line it is today around 1987, Peterson said. He has been compiling election information and breaking the results down according to precinct since the mayoral recall vote of that year.

"The (Omaha) World Herald called me and wanted me to do a map for the (Mike) Boyle recall election," Peterson said. That year, according to Peterson, the vote to recall Boyle came from west of 72nd street. Precincts east of that line were mostly in favor of retaining Boyle as mayor.

Peterson said that after that vote, the seat of political power in Omaha shifted west, and Omaha's Democratic Party, which once dominated city government, has never been the same.

"The Boyle recall was probably as much a recall of the Democrats as it was (a recall) of him personally," Peterson said.

If current trends continue, however, it looks like the Republican Party may be making inroads in precincts east of 72nd street. Peterson and Poulsen both said they wonder if the results from the last two elections may be pointing to a decrease in the size of the Democrat strongholds in Omaha.

The web page is the result of several weeks of work by Poulsen, Peterson, and Marvin J. Barton, a staff computer technician, who put the maps together from information supplied by the Douglas County Election Commission.

Peterson said he has been putting election maps together by precinct for a few years, but only recently thought of putting them on the World Wide Web. Poulsen said Peterson suggested the idea to him last year.

"Chris did a project like this last semester," Peterson said, "and I asked him if he'd like to help put it on the web." The results can be seen at <http://maps.unomaha.edu/Election>

'STOP WHINING'

Dear Editor:

There is a circle of individuals inside Student Government that does not want me to be elected Student President/Regent. These individuals play all kinds of political games so I will not be elected. I don't play these games so they whine and complain about everything I do. To them I say: STOP WHINING.

The majority of Student Government is composed of quality people who care for their school and want to make changes. These changes are a necessity for the future of the University of Nebraska at Omaha. I commend the majority of Student Government for their efforts in the future because I know they will get things accomplished that affect us students.

Mr. Winterboer, I would like to thank you for a great race. This has been one of the most enlightening experiences I've had in the past three years at UNO. I would like to take this time to wish Mr. Winterboer good luck on election day.

'Work will impact future of politics'

Dear Editor:

I'm writing to thank all the wonderful people that I had the chance to meet and work with in this election year. I had the pleasure of volunteering for the Perot/Choate Presidential campaign for the past three months. Although the election didn't finish as I had hoped, the work that was done for the campaign will have an impact in the future of American politics. While working to get the Reform Party on the ballot, I got to see first-hand how a grass-roots movement can be mobilized and molded into a legitimate alternative to the two major parties. I owe a debt of gratitude to Rosalie Shepherd, the Nebraska chairperson of the Reform Party. She will never know how many people she inspired with her tenacity, statesmanship and unparalleled belief that the Reform Party can help remedy a system of government that has failed its people.

With this experience behind me now, I know I will reflect upon it daily. I will think about it when I consider the future and how my generation will have to face the challenges of the 21st century while correcting the mistakes that the generation before us failed to solve.

'Raise Your Hand' to Ignorance

STAFF EDITORIAL

Right about now, you're probably feeling pretty good about yourself, aren't you? All in one day, you do a little slander, get in your vote and congratulate yourself in a dirty race won. What an accomplishment...

You know who you are, too. You are the ignorant fools who took the time out of their busy (?) schedules (away from stealing candy from babies and burning crosses, no doubt) to play a little bit with some scissors, a bottle of glue and a cheap copy machine.

The result? A cheaply-constructed flier, hung (illegally) all over campus with the face of Congressional Candidate James Martin Davis pasted on a Hitler-like figure, raising his right hand, surrounded with the words "All in Favor of 'Gun Control' Raise Your Right Hand" in large letters. At the bottom, the flier read: "Political prisoners and Death Camps can't exist without 'Gun Control.' Some Americans still feel 'Gun Control' is a good idea. To save America from these Nazi-lovers, we must destroy 'Gun Control'!!" followed by an insignia, address and phone number of an organization calling itself the "Jews For the Preservation of Firearms Ownership, Inc."

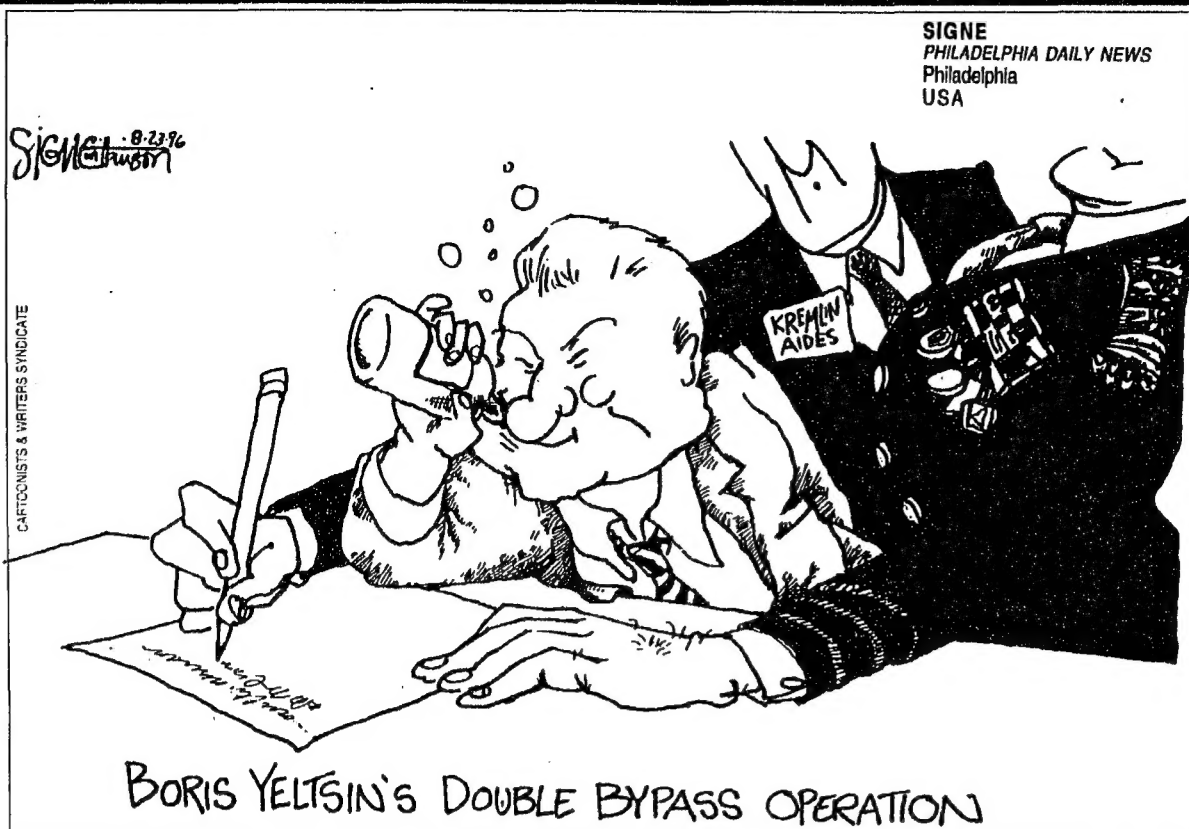

Does this organization exist? Yes. Did it create and distribute this propaganda? Absolutely not. According to Aaron Zelman, a member of this Milwaukee-based organization, "Some moron has done this without our permission or knowledge. We are totally apolitical and under no circumstances do we get involved with partisan politics."

He even went on to say that if anyone has any information about who is responsible for this illegal use of their name and slogan, he would certainly like to know who these people are.

And I'm sure he isn't the only one...

So, about right now, you're probably sitting back and feeling pretty good because your candidate won, right? Laughing about the 'loser' in the race.

Well, there really is a true loser, but it's not James Martin Davis. It's the morons armed with lies.

'Liberal Clinton Will Emerge Again'

"You ask for it, you got it."

No, I'm not speaking of the slogan for Toyota, but of the Boy Wonder, Bill Clinton. Tuesday, the voters cast their ballots and chose him as the Commander-In-Chief for a second term (Insert congratulatory, half-hearted handshake). Maybe now, those afflicted with the Clinton myopia will see the true liberal shine through.

Many Democrats felt betrayed by Clinton's delve into the heart of assorted conservative proposals. He realized the importance of coming to terms with the voters of America. He was not being "bi-partisan," or bringing together Republicans and Democrats for the good of the country. This was plain and simple: votes.

Bill Clinton has had more internal facelifts than all of his Hollywood regime combined (That's a lot of facelifts!). He tells one group what it wants to hear, and then turns around and tells another group the exact opposite. This is politics at its finest, and there is no one finer than Clinton himself. There are too many instances involving the President to list. One, in particular, comes to mind.

Following the death of Ron Brown, Secretary of Commerce, Clinton was seen walking after the funeral joking and laughing with a counterpart. No, there is nothing wrong with joking and laughing. It is a part of the grieving process (Hell, it's a excuse for the Irish to throw a party!). But as Clinton turned and saw the video cameras fixed on him, he quickly turned his smile into a frown, and an invisible tear appeared from his eye. I read somewhere that Bill Clinton was "the only man in the world who could cry out of one eye."

Is our country in ruin? Of course not! If these are the cards we are dealt, let's play the game, not fold. This is not a day of mourning. The United States is the greatest country in the world. We need to continue to show that we are (even though the rest of the world chuckles as Clinton is elected for a second term).

The Republicans have retained control of the House and Senate. Clinton will not be running for re-election, and the liberal policies will surface once again. This time, however, he runs into a brick wall. Bill Clinton will not have his way. For those who think the Republicans should work with the President to help better our country, not lock in turmoil, I do not disagree. I will not, however, stand by and see our country thrust into the age of Carter once again. So many wonderful things were proposed by Republican Presidents, only to be cast to the wayside by a Democratic controlled House. Let's stick to our guns, and ride this one out. The growth of our country will take place, albeit four years later than planned.

Don't be so sure that Bill Clinton will serve a four-year term. How does a second term of six months, or a year sound? Indictments are very feasible for Clinton and his dominatrix wife, Billary...er, Hillary. Can you recall all the "scandals" that were forgotten? Travelgate, where innocent members of the travel department were fired; Filegate, which had an uncanny resemblance to Watergate, was deemed "a bureaucratic snafu"; Whitewater (you know that story); and Mr. Wong and the improprieties of campaign finance. Soon, we will see if the pedestal on which he perches falls with resounding force.

My advice to Mr. Clinton is this:

Select your new staff carefully. Maybe run a background check this time, and try to cut back on drug users receiving top security clearance. Don't let Hillary push you around any more. Take a peek every once in a while, while no one is looking, to see if you truly do wear the pants in the family. Do seek Hillary's astrological advice (she's sure to give it to you, anyway). She seems to be very knowledgeable in seeking the advice of spirits. Hey, maybe she could summon Vince Foster! No, on second thought, better keep that one a "secret." Finally, check the airline rates over the next several months. Many are running specials on one-way tickets to Little Rock. One airline had a stopover in Tennessee, where you could conveniently drop off the human statue, Al Gore.

Do not fret, Republicans. You have scored a major victory. While Clinton continues using the White House as a penthouse suite, you can help move this country in the right direction. Proceed in your valiant efforts to eliminate bureaucracy and wasteful spending. That is all that can be asked of you. Nebraska has done its part in electing Republicans to both the House and Senate. Hopefully, these next four years will serve as a wake up call to the rest of America.

To be or not to be...

When is a Name Just a Name?

During the first year of marriage, my husband and I have overcome various problems, but we encounter one problem daily. That problem is my reluctance to change my name.

Before my marriage, I decided to hyphenate my name. I am very proud of my family name. For the past 24 years, my friends and family have known me as Michelle McGinnis. I did not want to lose my name just because I am married. Needless to say, family and friends questioned my decision.

My sister-in-law was the main person who objected to my name. According to my sister-in-law, a woman should not get married if she does not want to accept her husband's name. Although her opinion did not change my decision, her harsh words affected our relationship in a negative way.

Why should I drop my maiden name? Keeping one's family name is a family tradition. Both maiden and married names identify all of the women in my family. The only exception is my grandmother. During my upbringing, these strong women instilled in me a sense of independence. They always taught me to remember who I am and where I come from. Once you marry, you should never be too dependent upon anyone.

This is not a rejection of my husband, but an affirmation of myself.

Marriage is a union between a man and a woman. These individuals enter the marriage with their own minds, goals and identities. A major step in marriage is accepting your partner for who he is and not what you want him to be. Expecting them to change is a useless notion. That is why maintaining one's identity is crucial.

After a year of marriage, my husband has somewhat come to terms with my name. There are times, however, when my husband displays his true feelings.

Whenever the mail arrives, my husband is reminded of my extended name. The mail is addressed in my maiden name, married or a combination of the two.

One day, our automobile insurance arrived in the name of Mr. and Mrs. McGinnis. He nearly hit the roof.

I immediately called my agent and insisted that the policy read in both mine and my husband's name. My agent began to laugh, but sensed the seriousness in my voice. This incident was only the beginning to countless mailings and arguments.

MICHELLE MCGINNIS
Columnist

The other day, my husband noticed that in my columns I use my maiden name. I could not believe that he was upset. To be honest, I never gave my name much thought. Most of my family and friends know that I am married. What's the big deal?

I tried to explain to him that on most documents, my name is in both maiden and married name. The combination can be too lengthy. Therefore, I just use whichever name pops in my head first.

A couple of days ago, one of my co-workers was put in an awkward position while introducing me to a new employee. He said, "I'd like to introduce you to Michelle McGinnis. I mean Williams. Well, I guess you go by both."

The new employee did not know how to respond. To make him feel comfortable I simply stated, "Please call me Michelle."

Although my coworkers and husband may not understand my decision, they all respect it. That is very important.

When and if you get married, try to tackle all issues prior to the marriage. A simple problem such as your name can become a big problem if both parties do not compromise. As for me, I'll continue to use both names, because they identify who I am.

UNO's Problems Come More from Students

A friend of mine sent me a message not too long ago and mentioned a few of his beefs. The message resulted in a conversation; the conversation, in this little column today.

First, is there really a parking problem on this campus? I wonder it isn't a driving problem instead.

I think I could probably count the number of cars carrying more than one passenger today on one hand. Now I realize we value our independence and all that, but isn't it just a little ridiculous for 10,000 students to drive 10,000 cars to school?

Granted: I am exaggerating here a little.

But it is only a little. Next time you're out walking to your car, count the number of cars that go by with two or more passengers.

Is the fact that no one carpools a problem? I suppose that's up to you, but I encourage you to give it some thought. It would solve a number of problems very quickly if a few students started doing something like this. I realize carpooling would not work for everyone. For instance, it wouldn't work for me at least half of the time. But it is an option which deserves mention at least once.

Another thing my friend and I felt needed more attention at UNO was the recycling effort (or lack thereof). There has been a recycling program in place at UNO (in some form or another) for quite some time, but it should be clear to concerned students (and others) that it is simply not effective.

JONATHAN PELPHREY
Columnist

Other universities have far more comprehensive programs in place, and it's time for UNO to follow suit. It would not be difficult, either. UNMC has a very effective processing facility already, and I have been told that it would be relatively easy to set-up a cooperative program with them.

I understand that the apparent lack of student interest in this area might be attributed to the lack of dorms (and, by extension, the lack of community and involvement). I think that excuse is a lame one. Students on this campus need to stop complaining about the absence of "student life," and start living. It really boils down to this: if you give a hoot about the environment (and recycling) then it is time, right now, to start doing something about the situation on this campus.

Lastly, why is there no "Free Speech" wall on this campus? I spent my first year of college at a nice, conservative, "Christian" college, and even they had a wall like this. It's time for UNO to grow up and stop living in the '50s.

I understand that some feel we need to be protected from obscene material. To this I say two things. First, are we not adults? The "Free Speech" wall doesn't have to be in-your-face. If you do not wish to subject yourself to the thoughts of others, do not look at them. Choose for yourself.

Second, if we are trying to protect students from "obscene" material, why must we be bombarded with credit card applications in the classrooms? (You all know what I'm talking about). Talk about obscene!

Well, anyway, I've gone on long enough. Please forgive me for my rather cursory treatment of these issues. I intended to think them through more thoroughly, but I ran out of time.

Symptomless STDs Often Undetected, More Prevalent

By KARA SCHWEISS

Some Sexually Transmitted Diseases (STDs) have no symptoms. The existence of AIDS has created increased awareness of STDs, but certain STDs have become especially prevalent because they display no obvious symptoms in many people. They may also go undetected in routine medical exams, because physicians generally do not test for even the most common STDs unless the patient specifically requests.

Chlamydia is the most commonly reported STD in the United States, according to the U.S. Centers for Disease Control (CDC). Because chlamydia displays no symptoms in three out of four females and one out of four males, an indeterminable number of unreported cases exist. Gonorrhea is the second most commonly transmitted STD, and is similarly difficult to detect. Both diseases are easily curable with antibiotics, but must be identified by a physician before treatment can begin.

Kathy Tollefsrud, director of education for Omaha/Council Bluffs Planned Parenthood said many women undergo an annual pelvic exam, not realizing that many health care providers do not test for commonly transmitted STDs as part of the exam.

College-age individuals are at a particularly high risk for STD because of sexual behaviors common to that age group, especially multiple sex partners and inconsistent condom use.

Students Make Extra Cash Helping with Medical Tests

By BEN KOMAR

These days college students are selling more than just their plasma.

Over the past few years, volunteer medical testing has become an increasingly popular way to make money without actually working. Pharmaceutical companies pay research companies big money to test their drugs on healthy volunteers. According to Harris Labs, a Lincoln-based research company with a lab here in Omaha, all of the drugs have already been approved by the Federal Drug Administration.

"The FDA is looking for how the drugs react with the body. These drugs are often already marketed medication. It could be something that you've got a prescription for, and maybe now their looking to maybe transfer them to over-the-counter products," said Jim Chickoracki, Manager of Technical Communications at Harris Labs. "We're trying to make sure that the dosage form is the right amount of the drug to be given over the counter. Some drugs are tested to make sure they don't react with other drugs. All of this is under the supervision of the FDA. There's never any risk during any of these studies."

Chickoracki said Harris looks for a variety of qualities in test subjects, depending on the study. Generally, the patient need only be healthy. However, depending on the tests, there can be height, weight, age or gender requirements. "We're doing a lot more studies in older adults because of new formulations for the senior citizens," Chickoracki said. "Most of our studies are for people between 20 and 40, but we do involve people up to 75." Harris usually has between five and 20 studies going on at one time. A typical study requires eight to 20 people.

The length of a study varies from test to test. In most cases, the test only lasts one or two weekends, but sometimes they last about a week. In very rare cases, the tests can last up to 45 days. The volunteer is confined to the Harris' facilities during the entire period.

Harris Labs does get a lot of repeat subjects, Chickoracki said. "A lot of people who do studies with us here enjoy doing the studies, not only for the financial benefit but for the people they meet. So we end up with a lot of people who are calling in, asking about what studies are coming up next. We have many participants who made many thousands of dollars that can go towards paying off their credit cards, gifts for the holidays. People come to count on this kind of supplemental income pretty regularly, so we have a number of people who come back time and time again."

And people really do go back for the people they meet. Take, for instance, Robin Seagren and Matt Dufner who, according to a Dallas Morning News article, met in an Austin clinic while testing an anti-fungal drug. Not only did they make $2000 as human guinea pigs, they fell in love and got married.

Sometimes it pays to say "yes" to drugs.

They may mistakenly believe that a negative Pap smear (a tissue test which identifies cell abnormalities associated with cervical cancer) indicates that they have no STD. Physicians may ask STD risk assessment questions as part of a pelvic exam, but if no STD symptoms are present, the patient is usually presented with a clean bill of health.

"You have to be a partner in your own health care. You have to be tested if you have any reason to suspect you may be at risk," Tollefsrud said.

Some risk factors are new sex partners, multiple sex partners, unfaithful partners, and inconsistent condom use, Tollefsrud said. She said the only ways to prevent the transmission of STDs are abstinence, "total, absolute monogamy," and consistent condom use. "A lot of it is in your control, some of it is not. This is an issue that touches a lot of emotions."

STDs left untreated can cause infertility and cancers of the reproductive organs in both men and women, and pelvic inflammatory disease in women.

A STD carrier can transmit an STD unknowingly, and carriers who have multiple sex partners or do not use condoms consistently contribute to the increasing numbers of infected individuals, according to CDC statistics.

College-age individuals are at a particularly high risk for STD because of sexual behaviors common to that age group, especially multiple sex partners and inconsistent condom use, according to the CDC.

"People in that age group have usually not found their life partner yet. They're usually dating. Developmentally, that's normal and good. They are getting an idea about what they really want — that, quite frankly, is trial and error," Tollefsrud said. "A lot of times sex is part of dating. Chances are they will have more than one partner."

Tollefsrud stresses that despite the risks of STD among young singles, she does not think young people need to refrain from dating as long as they practice safer sex.

"I hate to be a messenger of bad news," she said. "Have fun...but use your head. Dating should be fun, or why else do it?" Tollefsrud emphasizes that both men and women should be tested for STDs if they have engaged in risky sexual behavior, even if they do not have symptoms of STDs. "You have to be tested if you have any reason to suspect you may be at risk," she said. "Men are much more likely to experience symptoms than women are because of their anatomy, but men should get checked up too if they have any reason for concern."

Dwarf mice live longer in study

Shorter People May Live Longer

REUTER WIRE SERVICES

LONDON (Reuters) - Shorter people may have the last laugh, according to new research which suggests a link between height and life expectancy.

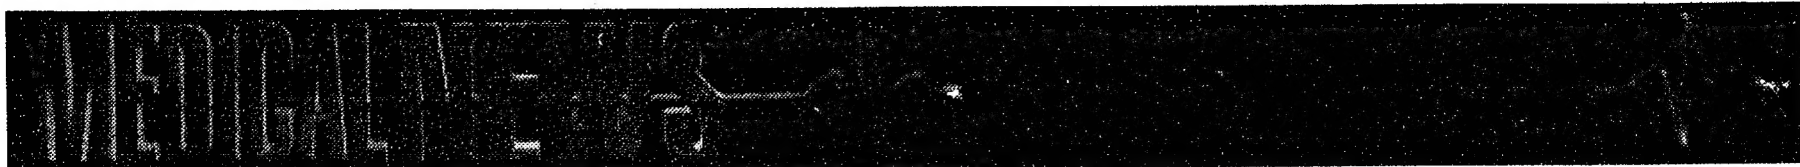

U.S. scientists found that dwarf mice with a hormone deficiency lived up to twice as long as mice of normal size.

The key seemed to be a lack of growth hormone. In other studies, mice with an excess of hormone were found to have had their lifespan reduced by premature ageing.

In a letter to the science journal Nature, the researchers led by Holly Brown-Borg from North Dakota University in Grand Forks, wrote: "Small breeds of dogs and horses tend to live longer than larger breeds, and shorter people may live longer than taller people from the same population."

The team compared 28 normal and 34 dwarf mice which were kept in the same conditions and fed the same food. They found the dwarfs lived much longer, with a difference of more than 350 days for males and more than 470 days for females.

Attention Deficit Disorder Affects Young, Old

By Beth Warner

Both adults and children are affected by Attention Deficit Disorder (ADD). Between 6 to 8 percent of all children, and 3 to 4 percent of all adults are affected by ADD. Of these 70 to 80 percent can be treated effectively with medication.

Thomas Brown, Ph.D., addressed about 300 people Saturday during his talk, "Why Can't Johnny (or John, Sr.) Pay Attention" at the Georgetowne Club near 141st Circle and Arbor Streets.

Brown said ADD used to be referred to as "hyperactivity" which people think of as "kids who couldn't sit still, shut up and cooperate."

In the 1980s researchers found that ADD could exist without hyperactivity. He said these people "can't pay attention even without hyperactivity."

He said ADD is often thought of as "a problem of little kids and mostly little boys," but girls are also affected. Among children males are three times as likely as girls to be affected. However, among adults, as many women as men are affected by the disorder.

He said symptoms of ADD are inattention, impulsiveness and hyperactivity. He called these the "holy trinity" of ADD. Although the three together are symptomatic, a person with ADD may not necessarily have all three symptoms, they may have just two of the symptoms or even just one.

Inattention, he said, will usually cause the most trouble for people.

He described inattention as having problems staying tuned. He compared inattention to a "car radio that will drift in and out."

About half of all children with ADD will lose the disorder as they grow into adulthood. However, half of those affected by ADD as children will be affected as adults.

Additionally, people with ADD are overwhelmed by stimuli, "it's like watching four different channels."

People with symptoms of hyperactivity have "two speeds—full speed ahead and asleep," said Brown.

About half of all children with ADD will lose the disorder as they grow into adulthood. However, half of those affected by ADD as children will be affected as adults.

ADD cross cuts all socioeconomic levels and all intelligence levels. "I treat people who are doctors, lawyers," Brown said, "It has nothing to do with how smart you are." However, the disorder seems to be hereditary. "It tends to run in families," said Brown. He said it can be particularly difficult when more than one person in the family has the disorder.

Brown said that people tend to lose their hyperactivity as they get older, but the difficulty paying attention continues.

He said ADD sometimes isn't identified until the person is in the fifth, sixth or seventh grade. He said that sometimes a person will "cruise through" the first few grades, and are not identified until the subject matter increases in difficulty and the disorder becomes a real problem.

Symptoms can vary. He said some patients he's seen have had difficulty getting activated to start the day. For example they might have trouble sleeping; even when the bodies tired the mind is wide awake.

He named five symptoms - getting organized to begin the day, difficulty paying attention, difficulty completing tasks, chronic irritability and difficulties with short term memory.

Brown said a person with ADD may have difficulty paying attention most of the time, but not necessarily all of the time.

"Everybody who has ADD has a few activities where they can pay attention just fine," said Brown. As an example Brown said sometimes a parent will bring in their child and say 'the teacher says she can't pay attention, but that's not true, we've seen her play Nintendo.'

"It's not a will power thing even though it appears that way," Brown said. It doesn't matter how much the person with ADD tells himself "I want to, I need to, I should," he said.

Brown said everyone has some ADD symptoms some of the time. "Everyone has these problems some of the time, but when it impairs functioning that's when we make a diagnosis," Brown said.

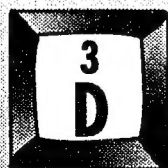

Brown said that 70 to 80 percent of adults and children with ADD can be effectively treated by medication. He said medications that have been around for some time and seem to work include, stimulants (such as Dexedrine, Ritalin, and Cylert), some anti-depressants and others.

Mavs Attempt to Defeat Jackrabbits for Conference Crown

By TONY REINKE

By winning one of the next two games, the Maverick football team's quest of success would claim the North Central Conference title.

UNO, No. 4 in the country, is 8-1 this season. The last time they won 8 games was in 1984, the year Sandy Buda's squad reached the quarterfinals of the NCAA II championships.

But even with the success of the 1996 squad, Behrs is quick to remind everyone that winning the conference doesn't mean the playoffs would be easier.

Before they step into the post-season, they must step past South Dakota State on Saturday and the University of South Dakota the following week if there are no tougher teams for UNO to face.

South Dakota State, who faces UNO at 1 p.m. at Al Caniglia Field, is No. 2 in the conference behind the Mavs. The Jackrabbits 5-2 in the conference and 6-3 overall. If the Mavs win Saturday afternoon, they win the outright conference crown and most likely gain a home-field spot for the playoffs which begin late this month.

The SDSU game will not be without question marks. The Mavs are coming off a 30-19 win over St. Cloud State which knocked out starting fullback Micky Koory and top cornerback Pat Davis. Both are expected to play on Saturday.

Notes

* UNO's 313 total yards in their 30-19 win over St. Cloud state may have seemed low for the win — but it's the way the Mavs win. In three other wins in 1996 the Mavs have failed to gain 250 total yards in the game (Northern Colorado, 224; North Dakota, 223; and Morningside, 233).

* Tailback Melvin McPhaul, who opened the conference season with 177 rushing yards against Mankato State is regaining his form. The Sophomore ran for 109 yards and 2 touchdowns. This is the same McPhaul who ran for 110 yards in the previous 3 games combined.

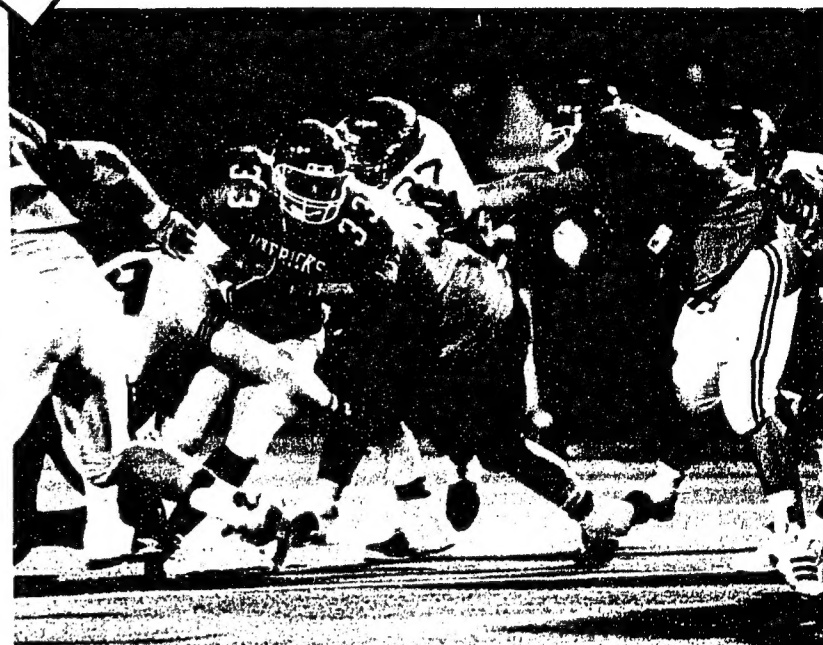

* How does this rating thing work? South Dakota State is led by the No. 1 rated quarterback in the conference, Noel Bouche. In the first 6 games of the season, in which SDSU was 5-1, he gained 1,100 yards of total offense. That mark was No. 5 in the conference behind UNO's Ed Thompson who was No. 4. But how is Bouche the No. 1 rated passer?

The SDSU quarterback is No. 4 in completion percentage among NCC quarterbacks, No. 4 in touchdown passes, No. 4 in passing yards and No. 4 in passing yards per game but rated as No. 1.

* Neither SDSU or UNO have flashy statistics. After the first 6 games of the season, UNO was No. 4 in the conference in total defense and SDSU was No. 6. In total offense, the Mavs were No. 7 and SDSU No. 5.

Volleyball Faces Important Regional Match Against Minnesota-Duluth

By TONY REINKE

At 1/2 of a game behind North Dakota State for first place in the North Central Conference, the Lady Mav volleyball team will face important conference and regional match-ups in the Fieldhouse this weekend.

Friday night, the Lady Mavs will face Northern Colorado. The Bears are 4-11 in conference play and No. 7 in the NCC.

Saturday night, the University of Minnesota-Duluth will travel to Omaha in an important regional match. Duluth is No. 5 in the country and 23-2 on the season.

"The last two weeks of the season, teams are going to be splitting as opposed to winning both like they have before," UNO Head Coach Rose Shires said. "Everything is so tight now — as it always has been — but the pressure is on now."

In conference play, the Lady Mavs have been nearly unstoppable. UNO ranks No. 1 in hitting percentage (.302), kills per game (16.6) and first in assists per game (14.82). Behind the 3-block system, the Lady Mavs are No. 2 in the conference in blocks at 2.84 per game.

Erin Shafer tips the ball over the net for the Lady Mavs. Their national No. 6 ranking is on the line with their pair of games this weekend.

The Lady Mavs are just as strong in the individual marks after UNO's wins over Augustana and South Dakota State.

Juniors Tanya Cate, Christyn Malone and Erin Shafer each had 33 kills during the weekend sweep. Shafer had 25 defensive digs and Jamie Shafer added 29.

Middle blocker Kim Gerdes finished with 27 kills to go with a .532 hitting percentage, 10 blocks and 18 digs.

For the season, Cate is No. 3 in hitting percentage with Gerdes at No. 5 and Erin Shafer No. 9. Setter Steffel is No. 1 in the conference in set assists, last weekend she became the 13th player in division II history to attain 5,000 set assists in a career. The Maplewood, Minn. native also holds the season high for hitting percentage in a match after a .765 performance in the Augustana win.

For Steffel's work last weekend, she was awarded the NCC player of the week. It was the third time this season that she won the award in 1996.

"Amy Steffel has picked up her game," Shires said. "She has put a lot of energy into finishing her senior year strong and bringing her team along with her."

So far Steffel has given the Lady Mavs the leadership for a No. 6 National ranking — a ranking that will be on the line this weekend.

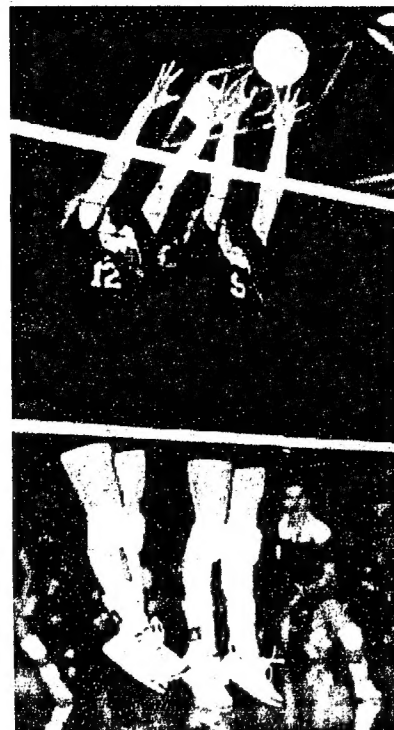

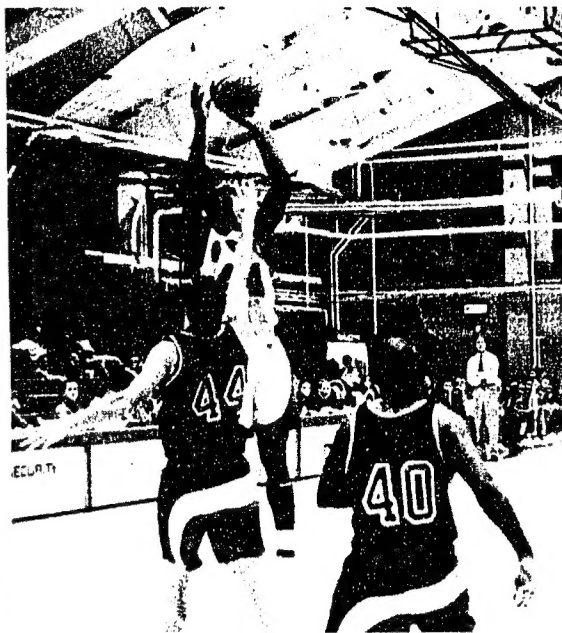

Mavs Sweep Express, 97-88

The Men's Basketball team defeated Rose City Express from Canada Tuesday night in an exhibition game in the Fieldhouse, 97-88. The Mavs will face the alumni in another exhibition game Tuesday at 7 p.m. in the Fieldhouse.

Jason Smith (#25 in photo at left) takes it to the glass. The Mavs outscored the Rose City Express, outscoring them by 20 points in the paint.

Robert Green (#44 in photo below) sinks a 3-point shot. The Mavs also outrebounded the Express with 44 total rebounds.

Amy Steffel (#12) and Kim Gerdes (#9) set a block. Both Steffel and Gerdes are starters for the Lady Mavs.
